

BENNY

(Entering)
Hey! Nicely! How goes it?

NICELY

Nicely, nicely, thank you.

BENNY

(Observing the direction of Nicely's gaze)
What are you looking at?

NICELY

(Delighted, turning to Benny)
Sky was just following Miss Sarah, and you should have seen her.

(He gives an imitation of Sarah's snootiness)

She give him a look that would have cooled off a moose at mating time.

BENNY

Great! Just so he don't take her to Havana.

NICELY

Havana! He couldn't take this doll to New Rochelle! Poor Miss Sarah! I wonder why a refined doll like her is mixed up in the Mission dodge.

BENNY

She is a beautiful doll, all right, with one hundred percent eyes.

NICELY

It is too bad that such a doll wastes all her time being good. How can she make any money from that?

BENNY

Maybe she owns a piece of the Mission.

NICELY

Yeah. Hey, where's Nathan? He ought to start lining up the game.

BENNY

I don't know – I suppose trying to see Adelaide. She's mad at him again.

NICELY

That Miss Adelaide. She is always taking his mind off honest work.

BENNY

Yes, it's too bad that a smart businessman like Nathan has to go and fall in love with his own fiancée.

NICELY

Benny, that is his weakness, and we should be tolerant, because I am told that it is a worldwide weakness.
